Course Description:

This course explores key concepts that have shaped the study of gender in film in the past 50 years. It considers different spectators' viewing positions and analyses how historical and social changes in the construction of masculinities and femininities have shaped specific film genres. A variety of issues related to sexuality, race/ethnicity and non-western representations are also considered as students are encouraged to study film texts closely to make their own readings based on the semiotics of the film and the ideology behind it.

Prerequisites:

GEP 4180 Research and Writing 2

Aims and Objectives:

- To critically analyse various representations of gender in film and the processes of reception, usually appropriate theory;
- To develop an historical understanding of some of the concepts and debates that have shaped the study of genre and gender in film;
- To develop an intercultural understanding of the issues surrounding the production and reception of films in a variety of contemporary cultures;
- To understand how films construct social and cultural realities and frames of reference that reflect the issues and ideologies of the society in which we live;
- To pursue independent research, using discourse analysis, on a topic/theme specific to gender and film.
