Course Description:

The course examines the major historical figures and historically important systems in psychology, giving special emphasis to the philosophical forerunners of psychology, and the way that certain philosophical questions are still relevant to psychologists today. Key topics include: monism, dualism, reductionism, the mind-body debate, free will versus determinism, artificial intelligence, the integration of Western and Eastern psychological theories, cultural assumptions in psychology, consciousness and intersubjectivity. Contemporary psychological paradigms that will be discussed include: functionalism, psychoanalysis, behaviourism, social theories of mind, and cognitive science.

Prerequisites:

MSc Psychology (Conversion) students only

Aims and Objectives:

The course aims to develop a comprehensive understanding of the historical and philosophical backgrounds to contemporary debates in psychology. The course is structured around a number of key questions, such as: what is the mind? To what extent is a scientific study of mind possible? Is psychology a social and cultural construction? The course takes a critical historical approach, tracing the development of psychology from its origins in philosophy and physiology. It also explores the impact that psychological paradigms have had on contemporary thought and examines the contemporary relevance of different psychological paradigms.

Programme Outcomes:
